MANTLE LAMPS FOR LIGHTING STREETS

ommissioner Oakley Commends Them in Preference to Present Kind-Little Higher in Price but More Effective.

a report to Mayor McClellan to-Commissioner John T. Oakley sugts that the public will approve of the to change all the gas lamps in uttan to Welsbach gas mantle hange from open flame to manme will give three times more power to each lamp and, while will furnish a better and more satistactory light. The difference in cost is $37.50 as against $24.75, the cost of maintaining each lamp per year. If the change is made it will be started on May 1 and be completed on July 1. It is part of the Commissioner's plan to substitute the high-priced electric are light with the mantled light, thus eventually saving dollars and allowing a wider distribution of lights throughout the city.

The Commissioner figures that if the change is made he can act within departmental appropriation for 1994. He therefore recommends the city's acceptance of the bids for mantided lights. Commenting further on the bids, the Commenting further on the bids, the Commissioner adds that there are no radical changes in the bids for electric lighting over those submitted last year.

lighting over those submitted ast year.

Although the city is the largest consumer on the books of the electric lighting company, says the Commissioner, no reduction over the price paid by the private consumer is made to the city.

The fact that New York uses 70.000 discandescent lamps alone in its public buildings is apparently ignored by the company. It is partly for the purpose of forcing a reduction in the price of electric lighting that the Commissioner is disposed to supplant are lights by mantle gas lamps.

budge the valve or bring it into working order. Heroic methods were then tried. A hole six feet in diameter was dug in the street and all the pressure concentrated on the valve. Three workmen in the Water Department were sent down to the pipes when the signal for applying the pressure was given. They took up their places as far from the valve as the limits of the excavation would allow. The men were Michael Gilligan, Joseph Casey and Patrick

We ordered these made up in three-button models, single and double breasted, to be patterned after models furnished by our Custom Tailors. The coats have hand-padded collars, hand-made buttonholes, and the shoulders are gracefully rounded to give the broad effect without resort to "padding." The ready-to-wear Clothing makers are thankful that Custom department accumulations are infrequent. Even such small lots as this are more or less disturbing to regular selling.
